A NOTE FROM THE EDITOR

Earlier this year the Executive of the Water Research Commission (WRC) decided to replace the old SA Waterbulletin with a new publication,as part of the process of transforming the WRC into an innovative organisation "that is continuously providing novel (and practical) ways of packaging and transferring knowledge into technology based products for the water sector and the community at large".

The new publication, called The Water Wheel (symbolising the WRC as a dynamic hub for water-centred knowledge) is aimed at the public communication of water science and technology through popular science articles and creative visual material.

Unlike the SA Waterbulletin, the new Water Wheel will carry commercial advertising in an effort to defray some of the escalating production costs. Editorial material will also be solicited from sources outside the Water Research Commission. Should you feel that you have a water story that needs to be published or want to advertise your products to 5 000 readers in the water field,please contact the editorial offices of The Water Wheel.
